Recruitment – 10th Battalion Lincolnshire Regiment – The Grimsby Chums

Private Frank JEWELL was a member of the Grimsby Chums who were a Pals battalion of Kitchener's Army raised in and around the town of Grimsby in Lincolnshire in 1914. When the battalion was taken over by the British Army it was officially named the 10th (Service) Battalion, The Lincolnshire Regiment. It was the only 'pals battalion' to be called 'chums'.

Battle of the Somme

The plan was for the British forces to attack on a fourteen mile front after an intense week-long artillery bombardment of the German positions. Over 1.6 million shells were fired, 70 for every one metre of front, the idea being to decimate the German Front Line. Two minutes before zero-hour 19 mines were exploded under the German lines. Whistles sounded and the troops went over the top at 7.30am. They advanced in lines at a slow, steady pace across No Man's Land towards the German front line.

Objective 9 – La Boisselle – The Somme - See Fig 1. Attack on La Boisselle

Private Frank JEWELL and the 10th Lincolns were assigned Objective 9, an attack on the village of La Boisselle. The village of La Boisselle was of huge strategic importance as it would open up the road to Bapaume. This would allow the Allies to attack Poziers, the next town further up the road then from there Thiepval.

The Germans held the best positions overlooking the two valleys – one to the left hand side of Lochnagar Crater- this was nicknamed 'Sausage Valley' by the British as it usually had an airship above it on reconnaissance. The other valley, which is on the other side of the road, was nicknamed 'Mash Valley'. This was the largest piece of No Man's Land on the whole Somme battlefield (700m wide)

Rather than try a head-on attack at the village of La Boisselle, the Allies decide to attack either side. As part of this offensive they set off two huge mines, one near the road at the side of the village (18,000kgs) and one at Lochnagar, the biggest mine set off that day at 28,000kgs. The shelling stopped and the mines were blown at 7.28am. At 7.30am the soldiers went over the top.

The debris from the Lochnagar mine rose over twice the height of the Eiffel Tower. Limbs were broken 250m away with the shock waves. The debris came down in seconds – so the extra time allowed for the debris to settle actually gave the Germans more time to prepare.

Fig1. Attack on La Boisselle

The Allied troops advanced down the Tara and Usna hills opposite La Boisselle and Lochnagar. The German machine gunners took up their positions in their trenches and redoubts and waited. Once the Allies were far enough down the hillside to prevent a retreat, the guns opened fire. The machine guns ran along the lines and the advancing soldiers fell row by row.

Final Action -10th Lincoln, 11th Suffolk and Cambridge and 24th Tyneside Irish

Three battalions, the 10th Lincolns, 11th Suffolk and Cambridge and the 24th Tyneside Irish and Frank JEWELL were in trenches directly opposite Lochnagar Crater. As nobody knew what was likely to happen when such a large mine exploded, they retreated back to their second line and were instructed to wait an additional five minutes to allow for all the debris from the mine to clear. It was reported that soldiers from the 10th Lincolns who had braced themselves across the trench, had limbs broken from the aftershock of the mine.

The debris settled quickly and the extra five minutes allowed the Germans time to man their damaged trenches and redoubts. The British advanced under machine gun fire from Sausage Redoubt, Scots Redoubt and fire from the rear of La Boisselle. The Lincolns made it to the eastern lip of the crater whilst The Suffolks pushed on to the German Line. One terrible incident of note was that of soldiers from the Suffolk/Cambridge battalion trying to fight their way into Sausage Redoubt only to be burnt to death by flame throwers as they reached the parapet.

The remaining Suffolks merged with the 27th Tyneside Irish on their right and managed to attack and seize Scots Redoubt, which was a major achievement given the events of the day. British observers noticed that Sausage Redoubt had not been taken and sent out the order for the support battalion of the 24th Tyneside Irish to hold their advance. The order was received too late as the 24th Irish were already on their way down towards the British front line. They presented an easy target for the German machine gunners and within ten minutes many had perished.

The remaining 24th Tyneside Irish fought on, merging with the 27th Tyneside Irish on their right and fighting their way two and a half miles behind the German lines. This was to be the greatest distance any battalions made on the day. They were last seen on the outskirts of Contalmaison, a small village, a long way behind the German lines - they were never seen again.

Outcome of battle: Very little gain on the day – The Lincolns captured ground up to the crater at a cost of 477 officers and men. The Royal Scots, Suffolks and 27th Tyneside Irish took Scots Redoubt.

Casualties at La Boisselle: The highest casualty rate of the day with over 6,380 officers and men either killed or wounded. Of these 2,267 were dead. Frank JEWELL was one of these soldiers. Eighty-five per cent of the soldiers who died on this battlefield, 1,927, are unknown soldiers. Frank JEWELL died at La Boisselle and has no known grave.

Commemorated at: Thiepval Memorial – Pier and face 1C.

The record of Private Frank JEWELL has been compiled as part of the World War 1 Centenary and Frank JEWELL who is an unknown soldier, is now known by Lauren Dickson, Beverley High School, June 2018.
